Across the Web The Tiger Rising, which is re-released by Highland Film Group and based on Kate DiCamillo's best-selling New York Times children's book, focuses on 10-year-old Rob (Christian Convery), who has just lost her mother, and who is likely to allow her imagination to go crazy. One fateful day, he encounters a Bengal tiger held captive by Beauchamp (Dennis Quaid), a nefarious motel owner. With the help of an enigmatic maid (Lac. Latifah) and a new schoolmate (Madalen Mills), Rob decides what to do with his potentially dangerous discovery. Latifah, who produced the film, which was directed by the former visual effects supervisor Giarratana, he talked to Variety about the project. What attracted you to The Rise of the Tiger? I love the relationship of telling a story that expresses how different people deal with pain. And I particularly enjoy seeing it through the children's lens because of their active imagination. Children are very in touch with their emotions and and of that they tend to be very honest. How important is it to have a family bias degree available for people to see? I make sure that at least one movie in the process of giving to God, or gives it a completely positive look, because people need to watch movies that they can connect to and that give them a sense of positivity. The world is hard sometimes, and people need to feel hope, and making movies like The Tiger Rising give that to people. Everyone has feelings, everyone goes through ups and downs, and I think we could give people a little room to feel, and not be so critical; not to be so unsympathetic, but to be truly considerate. Consider others as you would yourself. Stories that focus on a child's imagination are extremely important, how did this one stand out? Coming to work every day with Madeline and Christian was pure joy, and it's a lot of fun to work with kids because they're not tired for life or cynics. They see things that adults have allowed to fade into their eyes, so children make things fresh again, and they have great energy. The coolest thing about a child's imagination is how they deal with their emotions, because they're so close to them. But they don't have the maturity to deal with certain situations, so their imagination is a way to escape. What else is emerging? Next on the horizon is Hustle, with Adam Sandler, where I'm playing his wife, which will be an explosion. I'm going to introduce the American Lung Assn. telethon, and we're going to try to raise a lot of money for people who can use help. Then we jumped to play Robyn McCall in the Equalizer series on CBS - it's time to do justice, Latifah-style! In addition, I will vote in the next elections, voting at the local and national levels. VOTE, VOTE, VOTE! I've already completed my census, so now I just have to vote and I'm very excited about that. We have detected that JavaScript is disabled in this browser. The photo will be presented at the Toronto Film Festival through Highland Film Group, which is managing worldwide sales. Ray Giarratana is directing the piece that follows Rob, 12, who, after starting a new life in rural Florida at the Kentucky Star Motel, lets his imagination run wild, a contrast to his life as a harassed who just lost his mother. One day, his reality meets something more capricious than his own mind might wish for: an adult Bengal tiger hidden in the woods and and captive by the owner of the petty-spirited motel, Beauchamp (Quaid). With the help of the wise and mysterious maiden Willie May (Latifah) and the stubborn new girl at school, Sistine (Mills), Rob must decide whether to free the tiger and in turn dismiss his emotional pain. The producers are Deborah Giarratana of GG Filmz and Ryan Smith of Streamline Global, while Queen Latifah, Allen Cheney and Christophe Suchet serve as executive producers. Quaid, battered by WME, was most recently seen on the big screen on Sony's Universal Pictures' A Dog's Journey and The Intruder. He has reached the Netflix series Merry Happy Whatever and Lionsgate's Midway. Mills, who appeared at Andrew Lloyd Webber's Tony-nominated rock school: The Broadway Musical, will appear in the musical in the live-action film Jingle Jangle, with Forest Whitaker, Keegan-Michael Key, Phylicia Rashad. She is overflowing with the Abrams Artists Agency. Subscribe to breaking news alerts and keep your inbox happy. Happy.
